

Anti-blackness: This workshop provides a socio-historical and current perspective on anti-blackness in the U.S. using studies of education, environment, labor, and movement. Discussions include the impact of anti-blackness and calls for action.

Allying: Participants will learn core principles of aspiring allying development and effects of intention, impact, and strategies in allying social justice work.

Bias: This discussion provides an overview of implicit and explicit biases, including ways social conditioning feeds policy-making, practices, and xenophobia. Participants learn how bias can operate across interpersonal relationships, leadership, and work settings.

Intersections of Identities: Participants gain awareness about socialized identities connected with institutional structures of ableism, access to knowledge, marginalization, and privilege. An overview of intersectionality helps participants identify approaches for inclusive practices.

Language and Power: The uses of naming, framing, and polite conversation are among the topics that will be addressed to situate and contextualize agency, power, the disenfranchised, and social perceptions.

Microaggressions: This workshop addresses recognizing forms of microaggressions, their health impact, and provides resources for responding to microaggressive behaviors.